

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30, 1745.

remainder of the Discoveries made by the French Academics, that were sent to measure a Degree at the Equatorial.

THESE Gentlemen pursuing their different Routes, met together at Quilo, in the Month of June, 1736. They pass'd that vast Chain of Mountains call'd la Cordellera, with infinite Trouble, being obliged to spend Seven Days in travelling Eight Leagues; not only thro' the excessive cold Weather, but also the dangerous Precipices, worn by the Torrents and Rivulets that every where ran down the Hills, in the Space of Ages, have torn away a great Part of the Surface. The first Thing they observed, was, that the Mountains, as it is call'd, and which lies in the Space between these Mountains, is much higher Ground than the loftiest Mountains in Europe; that is to say, much more elevated from the Plane of the Sea, and the inhabitants breathe an Air at least a Third Part Thinner than any other Men.

They mounted next the Pichincha, in order to take Observations for forming their Triangles; they were surrounded continually, surrounded by the Clouds. In the Space of three or four Times in half an Hour, there was a Storm of Rain; then fair Weather; then lightning, so much the more terrible, because it was not only near them, but the very Matter of Thunder was, as it were, form'd at their Elbows. The Summit of these Mountains, which, without a doubt, may be call'd the Kingdom of Meteors, afford them the Prospect of many wonderful Phenomena.

It is generally thought, that the Snows render the Mountains of Peru inaccessible; nevertheless, Messrs. Bouguer and Condaminie were not afraid to climb the highest of them, in order to visit the Volcanos, which they are fill'd; and to satisfy, in other Respects, their intrepid Curiosity. When the great Point to be settled of fixing the Stations for their Triangles, the Academicians found themselves quite at a loss, for the Mountains are the properest Places for Operations in Europe, they are least so in Peru.

As they were employ'd in making Observations, found themselves either continually envelop'd in dark Clouds, or expos'd to such Tempests, as left them no room to do any Thing but their own Preservation; besides that, the long Valley of the Cordellera is very unequal, and of it being 126 Toises higher than the other; and they were obliged to have the Level continually in their Hands, in order to know the Height of the Spot they were upon. They divided themselves into two Companies, moving along the opposite Sides; and when they met, they discovered no Difference than three Inches, in the Space of 12 Toises, which was the Length of their first Base. They measured, generally speaking, all the Angles of the Triangles; and these with different Quadrants. Meridian, form'd of 33 principal Triangles, took Line of more than 60 Leagues. These Triangles being a little beyond the Equator, were elevated 6 Toises above Quilo, and about 2000 Toises above the level of the Sea. M. Godid ended his at the little Town of Cuenca; the other two Academicians push'd as far as Tiqui; where a fine open uniform Plain offer'd them an Opportunity of forming a second Base, proper for verifying their former Operations. Bouguer, for his Part, pass'd upwards of three Years in Peru, continually occupied in going from one End of the Meridian to the other; and repeating the Operations, that not the least Suspicion might remain of Inaccuracy, either committed or overlook'd.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Paris, January 8. Yesterday was concluded, and here by the respective Plenipotentiaries, a Treaty of Mutual Alliance and Friendship, between their Britannick, Polish, and Hungarian Majesties, and the States General of the United Provinces.

Paris, January 9. On the 29th past Cardinal Acquaviva returned to this City from Viterbo, where, agreeable to the Instructions from the Spanish Court, he was to assist at a Council of War held there by M. de Noailles, to concert the Passage into Lombardy of the Spanish Troops under his Command, in order to join those of Don Philip. The said Cardinal has, by Consent of this Government, forbidden the Entry into this City, of the Spanish and Neapolitan Officers; by which, and the Removal on the 29th Instant of their Invalids from Monte Rotondo, and the Baggage from Rome to the Army, it is conjectured that they are speedily to begin their March.

Relation of the Attack upon Neumark, in the Upper Palatinate, January 16.

Upon the 8th the Corps under General Thungen quit their Quarters near Hirschau, in order to advance towards Amberg. The Head Quarters were fix'd at Neumuhl. Upon the 9th the Austrians work'd upon the Batteries, and upon the 10th they were able to fire from them; but as the General receiv'd certain Advice that a Body of the French and Imperialists was in March to succour Amberg, he changed the Siege into a Blockade, leaving 5000 Men under the Command of Baron Scherzer, Colonel of Leopold Daun's Regiment, and with the rest of the Troops we march'd thro' Castil, towards Neumark; which, upon the 14th, we attack'd. Upon the 15th, about Eleven o'Clock, our Cannon having made a considerable Breach, the French Commandant, the Marquis Grassol, capitulated, and surrendered Prisoner of War, with his whole Garrison, which consisted of one Battalion of French, of the Regiment of Count Saxe; one Battalion of Bavarians and Palatins; 300 of Hohenzollern's Dragoons; and 180 Hussars. We took the Horses belonging to these two last, and four Standards belonging to the Dragoons. Since our Entry into the Upper Palatinate, we reckon that we have already made 3000 Prisoners of War, and we have not lost above 30 Men, kill'd and wounded.

The Inhabitants of Breadstreet presented a Petition to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen on the 22d Inst. complaining of the great Nuisance occasion'd by the Carts standing there, which has been a very great Detriment to the Place, many of the best Houses being empty on that account: When his Lordship, and the Court, took their Case into Consideration, and order'd, that, for the future, no Carts be permitted to stand in Breadstreet.

Yesterday came Advice that Commodore Warren has taken a French Man of War of 30 Guns, and two large Privateers, after an Engagement of three Hours; in which, it is said, that 100 of Commodore Warren's Men were kill'd. The Prizes are carried into Boston.
